

Distribution boxes for sale from Swedish manufacturer

Article Overview

Swedish distribution boxes are available in modular, portable, and decentralized designs, with leading manufacturers including Ahlsell and Weidmüller.

Types of Distribution Boxes

1. Construction and Portable Boxes These are designed for temporary power distribution on construction sites or for portable applications. They often feature impact-resistant plastic housings, multiple Schuko or IEC sockets, integrated fuses, and protection classes like IP44. Some models include earthing fault circuit breakers, automatic fuses, and options for wall mounting or steel box integration. They are suitable for controlling lighting, powering tools, or managing container installations .

2. Modular and Decentralized Boxes Used in industrial automation and harsh environments, these boxes support decentralized signal and power distribution. They are often rated up to IP67, ensuring protection against dust and water. Modular enclosures allow flexible configurations for sensor-actuator networks, M8/M12 distributors, and EX zone applications. Features include pluggable insulation displacement connections, busbar trunking systems, and "PUSH IN" contacts for cables ranging from 0.5 to 10 mm² .

3. Wall-Mounted and Fixed Installation Boxes These are designed for permanent installations in commercial or residential buildings. They include terminal connections from above or below, ample connection space, and integrated service hatches for easy maintenance. Ergonomic designs and automatic door closers protect the unit from dirt and splashes, while twist locks and padlock systems prevent unauthorized access
