

How to hide the fiber optic router in the master bedroom

Article Overview

You can hide your fiber optic router using baskets, decorative boxes, bookshelves, or plants while ensuring proper ventilation and signal strength.

Key Considerations

- Ventilation: Routers generate heat, so any hiding solution must allow airflow. Avoid airtight containers and ensure at least 4 inches of open space around the device .
- Signal Strength: Avoid dense or metal enclosures that block WiFi. Lightweight materials like wicker, wood, or perforated boxes are ideal .
- Accessibility: Make sure you can easily reach the router for resets or maintenance .
- Cable Management: Plan how power and fiber optic cables will enter and exit the hiding spot cleanly .

Creative Hiding Solutions

- Wicker or Decorative Baskets: Place the router inside a basket with holes for ventilation. You can position it on a shelf, nightstand, or corner of the room. Keep the lid off or slightly ajar to allow heat to escape .
- Bookshelf Camouflage: Use hollowed-out books or faux book spines to disguise the router on a bookshelf. Ensure openings for airflow and easy access .
- Houseplants: Strategically place tall potted plants around the router. Plants do not block WiFi signals and add a natural aesthetic .
- Decorative Boxes or Storage Bins: Choose boxes with perforations or slats to allow ventilation. These can match your bedroom decor and hide the router completely
